

- Game On! - A free web service used to find out what video games are out there and how/when you can get them.
- A web service dedicated to finding new and upcoming games, providing information and news about them, and in the end showing the user how to pre-order or buy them. This involves providing the user with a "Wish List" and direct links to sites that sell the games. The site is comprised of a main page where the user initially selects what genre of game they are interested in. This then will bring up a list of games and a short summary of the game including ratings, plot, platform, and release date. The user then has the option of pre-ordering, buying, or adding to their wish list. Users can add more or delete games from their wish list as they choose. The hardest part will be ensuring that the users have cookies enabled on their site and ensuring that they are also used properly.
- The site will be geared specifically towards internet-savvy users, but it will still be simple enough for a parent or similar person to use to keep track of games as presents for their children.
- To make people aware of what new games are out there and make it a crossroads of gaming information. This site is built from a lot of external site's information.
